

Marble Shepherd Boy, A.Froli

An exceptionally detailed smaller than life sculpture of a shepherd boy carved from white marble thought to originate from Italy, signed A.Froli . The detailing on the piece is of remarkable quality especially in the hands, face and clothing and the depth, vitality and movement are also an indication of the quality and superior nature of this piece.

Since antiquity marble has been highly favoured by sculptors for its ability to reproduce fine detail better than any other stone and became very popular in England in the early to middle part of the nineteenth century which is about the time this piece is thought to have been made.
